NEW BRUNSWICK MILITARY HISTORY MUSEUM

Oromocto New Brunswick is home to CFB Gagetown, the largest military training base in the British Commonwealth. Our community has been built on the intense pride we have in the men and women who serve our country in the Canadian Forces. If you are interested in history and the role our military has played in shaping our great nation, you must pay a visit to our two museums.

Canadian Forces museums play an important role in collecting, preserving and promoting Canada's military history. Both of our museums have their own unique theme. Not only will you be able to discover exclusive artifacts, you will also learn of interesting periods of our history and heritage. Knowledgeable museum staff are on hand at each museum to answer your questions, but will share their passion for Canadian military history with you.

The History

The entire family will enjoy learning about the rich history of our Canadian Military. From the Loyalists to the present day modern soldier, the New Brunswick Military History Museum has it all displayed on two spacious levels.

The New Brunswick Military History Museum was granted official Canadian Forces Museum status in 1973. Since that time it has grown and evolved into one of the largest museums of its kind.

Our role is to collect, preserve and promote Canada's Military Heritage.

The mission of the New Brunswick Military History Museum (NBMHM) is to collect and preserve, research and exhibit artifacts which illustrate the history and heritage of the military forces in New Brunswick, and New Brunswickers at war, during peacetime, and on United Nations/NATO duty.
